DO YOU KNOW?

By S. P. B. Mais

It has been the greatest fun in the world thinking out two thousand questions quickly, the answers to which ought to be on the tips of the tongues of the well-informed. For years as a Public School master I found the setting and correcting of General Papers a delicious holiday after the stereotyped round of Examination Papers on set subjects, and looking back I am inclined to think that a boy's ability is better gauged by his answers to a General Paper than by any other form of examination.

But the whole object of study, if Bacon is to be believed, is delight, and there is an immense amount of joy to be gained from the discovery of how far short we fall of our own standards when we seriously begin to do some stock-taking of our knowledge at all ages, not only in the spring-time of life.

The idea of this book is that you should pit yourself first against the famous person who has already tried and whose marks are given at the top of the papers, and then that you should pit yourself against your friends.

It is obvious that there can be no hard and fast rules, but generally speaking, competitors ought to allow themselves no longer than fifteen minutes for each paper, and of course have access to no help from outside, whether from books or orally from other people.

DO YOU KNOW?

Two marks are allowed for the correct answer to each question, in order that one mark may be given to partially correct quotations, etc.

I hope that you will like this book so much that you will shower copies on all the young people you know, for it has been by some accidental question and the looking up of an answer, that the greatest geniuses have been set going on the path that they have ultimately made for ever famous. A book of this kind serves one purpose only; in teasing the brain it ought to open the windows of the soul and once more impress upon us how vast is the treasure house of the world's art. In a world full of distractions and vulgarity it is good to be reminded of the existence of Leonardo da Vinci, Milton, and Sir Isaac Newton. We are, or ought to be, driven at the mere mention of their names, back to reap something of the harvest which they sowed for us. All our senses should take fire once more at the sights and sounds and scents that are conjured up by the majority of the names that you will find in the following pages.

If this book has any value it is due entirely to the splendid sportsmanship shown by the very famous men and women who ungrudgingly allowed themselves to be made scapegoats in order that you should benefit by comparing your results with theirs. The only way I can repay them is by resisting the tremendous temptation to disclose their specific errors and omissions which were as delightful as they were unexpected.

FICTION

CHEVRONS. By LEONARD H NASON 7s 6d net

A story of the war from the private's point of view, salty, humorous, Rabelaisian, told with the graphic idioms of men living close to the common events of existence—eating, drinking loving fighting, dying.

It is the saga of Sergeant Eadie from the time he left the replacement camp —without permission and with one wound stripe—to the time when he rejoined his unit, with wound stripe stripped from his sleeve because "all you get," he observed "by wearing wound stripes is a lot of cheap conversation"

JESUS—A MYTH. By GEORG BRANDES Translated from the Danish by EDWIN BJORKMAN. 6*s.* net.

The greatest critic of modern times, after a complete and searching study of the evidence, holds that Jesus never existed as a man, but is a wholly legendary figure. Popular history is full of legends—that of William Tell for example—which no good critic or historian accepts as true. Now the legend of Jesus is claimed by the author to be of a piece with other legends, no more true, with no greater support in the evidence, but maintained, with all the force of dogma and superstition by the powerful system of Christianity. Brandes has never employed his critical-analytical abilities more finely than in developing this important argument.
